

Lobbyist Paper on a Political Issue

Gay Marriage

Gay Marriage is a very hot topic as of right now in the United States. Personally, I feel as though it is completely wrong to not allow two human beings who love each other to be able to marry each other. To me, if two human beings, no matter what sex they are, love each other, and they are willing to agree to be faithful to each other until death do them part, then it should not be an issue.

I believe that the reason why so many people make a huge deal about gay marriage is because they do not believe that two human beings of the same sex should be able to marry each other, for it is not "right". Well, how is it that almost half of the marriages that happen these days between a man and woman end up in divorce? That used to be considered not right also. So, why can two human beings of the same sex now not get married to each other? To me, it is completely hypocritical of people to not allow gay marriage.

Democrats typically believe in change, while Republicans typically like to keep things the way they are. I, generally, think of myself as in-between the two. If I had to choose, I would probably say a democrat because I seem to agree with more of their ideas. However, I believe that many people pay attention to the term too much, and they think that because they are a democrat, for example, then they are supposed to believe in everything they think. I completely disagree with that. Just because many Republicans believe that we should keep things the same does not mean that things are not going to change. Many things have changed. Some things for the better and some for the worse. I do not see how agreeing to let two human beings being able to marry each other is going to be a bad thing whatsoever. If this will make two people happy together, then everything should be fine.
